

Guidance for submissions to Technology and Culture

As the editorial team for Technology and Culture, we are dedicated to increasing the journal's accessibility by creating larger audiences for our research articles.

We are looking for submissions that speak to a global audience beyond your topic to help shed light on its significance for scholars working in other topics. Also important is to indicate how your topic is relevant for today's scholarship. Finally, we would like you to consider how your manuscript would be taught in the classroom.

In all submissions, we are looking to see—at a minimum—a discussion of:

- Historiographical context of your case study
- Global relevance
- Broader significance of your case study

These points should be made clear in the abstract.

Submission of a manuscript implies your assurance that the content has not previously been published in form or in substance, and that the manuscript is not under consideration elsewhere.

Manuscripts may be submitted via Scholastica, our electronic submission system. (https://submissions.scholasticahq.com/technology-and-culture/for_authors You will have to create a user id on Scholastica to proceed.) We do not accept hard copy submissions. Email submissions will only be accepted if the author is unable to access the Scholastica system.

We can work with files in any common Mac or Windows word processor format, but World Files are preferred. Please do not send a PDF file.

Articles are selected by double-blind peer review. The only place your name should appear is on a separate title page; please be sure to remove any self-referencing footnotes as well. If your identity is obvious from the manuscript, it cannot be sent out for review.

Length, format, and style: We have a word limit of 7,500 words (without footnotes) per article (abstract: 150 words). Footnotes should not be discursive: if the information is important, put it in the text! We have a limit of five illustrations and or tables. Please upload your illustrations as individual files, do not embed them in the text but upload them on Scholastica as individual files. If you feel that you need to exceed one of these limits significantly, please consult the managing editor (managingeditor@techculture.org). Make sure, however, that the manuscript file has callouts indicating where each figure should be placed.

Please use a standard font (e.g., Arial, Times New Roman) in a standard size (12 point). Use minimal formatting. Double space everything, including block quotations, notes, and figure captions, and leave adequate margins. Do not embed illustrations or tables in the text; send them as separate files instead. For notes, we use the Chicago Manual of Style's footnotes-bibliography style.
